

Below are some of the experiences parents tell us they have had with their children who are affected by Autism (paraphrased).

- My child was developing normally and meeting all his milestones. He suddenly regressed into autism following a high fever when he was two years old.
- My non-verbal son screamed in pain with no answers after two weeks of doctor visits. We persisted until we figured out he had abscessed teeth. He is all better now.
- I suffer from ear pain and tinnitus. My doctor blamed my autism saying nothing was wrong; and refused to treat my pain or refer me for further tests.
- A family at my church took their non-verbal son with autism to the emergency room. He was told the screaming was just autism, prescribed laxatives and sent home. He died that night with a serious colon infection.
- My son is banging his head and banging his head and the doctors do not know what to do to help him.
- My son's bowel disease improved with treatment. He was then able to focus better and stay seated during school. He now gets good grades.
- A doctor placed his non-verbal patient on medication after tests showed the child was having seizures. The family noticed the child began to speak coherently on the seizure medication.
- My child stopped having severe constipation after starting a casein and gluten free diet.
- Our immunologist was a tremendous help getting our child better by treating the mitochondrial disorder that is common with autism.
- Doctors tell us, "It's just autism" when our kids are sick; and send us home with psychiatric drugs.
